Christians Urge Palestine As Post-War Refuge

A statement calling for the establishment of Palestine as a post-war refuge for Jews of Central and Eastern Europe was issued under the signatures of seventy-five Christian clergymen and laymen.

The statement was issued through the Committee of Christian Leaders, Clergymen and Laymen, in Behalf of Jewish Immigration into Palestine, with headquarters at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"We look forward to the triumph of democracy in Central Europe," the statement read, "and to the establishment there of a social structure conformable with accepted Christian principles in which it will be possible for Jews as for all others to live in dignity and freedom.

"Even the less, the difficulties in the way of a general rehabilitation of the Jewry of Central and Eastern Europe are very great. Anti-Semitism, long endemic in this part of the world, has been intensified by Nazi indoctrination. It has become so deeply rooted that Jews have lost hope of living there with any degree of security. They have been largely excluded from the economic life of Central Europe.

"The task of rehabilitating them economically would be difficult under any circumstances. It will be extraordinarily difficult amid the distractions of post-war reconstruction.

"For large segments of European Jewry migration represents the only practical program. Such migration need not and should not be [illegible] Jews should not have to live a bitter life, [illegible] from fear and want, is indefensible. We believe furthermore that large-scale migration will serve to reduce pressure against those Jews who elect to remain where they are at present."

Of all the lands available for migration in the post-war world, the statement said, "Palestine is the most practicable," as a land to which the Jews have "an ancient moral claim" recognized by international sanctions.

Pointing out that the rights of the Arabs in Palestine should be fully safeguarded, the statement said that Jewish immigration since the first World War "has brought many social, economic, cultural and hygienic benefits to the Arabs" and that the continuance of such immigration would increase the potential resources of the land "and thus prove a blessing to Jew and Arab alike."

"It is our conviction, therefore," the statement said, "that in the post-war settlement Palestine should be made accessible to Jewish refugees from lands of persecu-

Nazis Evacuate Jews From Dutch Coastal Areas

WARN NON-JEWS AGAINST WEARING ARMBANDS

The Nazis are evacuating all Jews from many places on the Dutch coast. It was reported recently that the Nazis plan to concentrate all the Dutch Jews in Amsterdam.

Dutch Jews are in future to be compelled to wear yellow armbands, with the Magen David and the word "Jood", according to the semi-official German Transocean News Agency. From the same source it is learned that all the anti-Jewish regulations enforced in the Reich are to be introduced into Holland.

The Nazi authorities in Leyden have issued a warning to non-Jews that any attempt on their part to wear the Magen David emblem as a mark of sympathy with the Jews will make them liable to internment in a concentration camp.

Referring to the new armband measure, the Free Dutch "Radio Orange," in a broadcast from London, has urged all loyal Dutchmen in Holland to wear the Magen David armband also. "If these reports are indeed true," said Radio Orange, "we trust that you will recognise this malicious order for what it is—a new endeavour on the part of the Germans to build a wall between Dutch Jews and the Dutch, a wall which you never wanted. When some time ago Germany issued a similar order in Belgium, the Belgian people retaliated by all wearing the David Shield. We rely on you to plan and carry out at once all measures necessary [illegible]

Nazis Screen Machine-Gunning Of 258 Jews

At the Gross Lichterfelde Barracks in the western suburbs of Berlin, 258 Jews were put to death by the S. S. on May 28, and their families deported, in retaliation for an alleged Jewish plot to blow up the anti-Bolshevist "Soviet Paradise" exhibition at the Lustgarten. They had been arrested in a Gestapo raid the night before, following the discovery of five bombs in an anti-Bolshevik exhibition. The families of the executed men are being sent to the east, the report said.

Elaborate measures were taken to prevent any witnessing of the machine-gunning. All windows overlooking the barracks were ordered closed and blacked out, and nobody was allowed to pass within 500 yards.

Reproductions of hovels allegedly moved stone by stone from Russia have been on display for some time to represent the living conditions of Soviet workers. On May 27—the day on which Reinhard Heydrich was fatally wounded in Prague—it was claimed that five time bombs were found at the exhibition.

Then, according to reports from various trustworthy sources available at Stockholm, the Gestapo rounded up a number of Berlin Jews for investigation on the charge of having planted the alleged bombs found on the premises of the exhibition.

Despite the fact that Jews, who must wear the conspicuous Star of David on their clothing are ruled off Unter den Linden and streets of central Berlin generally, the Gestapo claims to have suspected [illegible] that they had time to explode, because as far as can be learned, the Gestapo has not claimed any damage or injuries to persons.

The Jews were sentenced and taken to the Alexanderplatz Police Station, and their wives and children to the Levetzowstrasse Synagogue in the East End—the only Jewish temple in Berlin, but now used only as a concentration depot for Jews who are being deported. Here they are told to camp on straw-covered stone floors until transport facilities eastward had been arranged.

Meanwhile, at dawn on May 28 the male Jews at the Alexanderplatz Station were herded onto trucks and taken out to the former Imperial Army Barracks at Gross Lichterfelde, now S. S. quarters and prominent in party history as the scene of executions in the 1934 party purge. Here they were executed by heavy calibre machine-guns.

Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels wrote that Germany will carry out a mass "extermination" of Jews in reprisal for the Allied air bombings of German cities, which, he acknowledged, have caused heavy damage.

Goebbels, in an article in the publication "Das Reich," said the Jews would be exterminated throughout Europe "and perhaps even beyond Europe" in retaliation against the heavy air assaults. He said the Jews had incited British

Resignation of Chicago Trustee Believed Result Of S.E.P. Story On Jews

Resignation of Albert D. Lasker, president of Lord & Thomas, as a trustee of the University of Chicago, was accepted by the board of trustees.

Although trustees refused to comment, authoritative sources said that there was no doubt that the resignation was due to his objection to Milton Mayer's article "The Case Against the Jew," published in "The Saturday Evening Post." Mr. Mayer, who is himself Jewish, is employed by the university as an assistant to the president, Dr. Robert M. Hutchins.

Mr. Lasker, a former Chicagoan, has been a trustee of the University since 1937. In 1928 he gave the university $1,000,000 to found the Lasker Foundation for Medical Research, devoted to increasing life expectancy of those over fifty. In 1929 he gave the university his $3,000,000 Mill Road farm in Lake Forest, Ill.

Weizmann Honored In New York

Gentiles and Jews from all walks of life filled the grand ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria in New York in a tribute to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, British scientist and president of the World Zionist Organization, who is in the United States for a brief visit.

Joining in the testimonial, President [illegible] Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, Thomas Mann and others sent messages praising Dr. Weizmann as a leader of his people and as a renowned chemist whose far-reaching scientific work both in the World War and in this war have been much shrouded in military secrecy.

The dinner marked the completion of thirty years of leadership by Dr. Weizmann as a world Zionist, and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Balfour Declaration, which Dr. Weizmann had a major share in procuring.

The Zionist leader arrived in the U.S. last month after having cancelled a scheduled departure from England last February when he and Mrs. Weizmann received word that their son, Michael, a Royal Air Force pilot, was missing, having failed to return from a sweep over France.

President Roosevelt, sending his personal greetings to the 2,100 persons who attended the dinner, expressed in his telegram his "high appreciation of Dr. Weizmann's scientific and humanitarian achievements during the course of his long and distinguished career."

Viscount Halifax wired that "as one of the world's outstanding chemists," Dr. Weizmann "has in two wars rendered signal service to His Majesty's government and to his country in a cause which is the cause of all free men." As a leader of Jewish people for a quarter of a century and more, Lord Halifax wrote, "he has shown qualities of skill and statesmanship with a broad and tolerant outlook that is all too sorely needed in the world just now."

Among speakers at the dinner were Dr. Stephen S. Wise, who was toastmaster; Miss Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist; Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, national chairman of the United Palestine Appeal; Judge Louis E. Levinthal, of Philadelphia, president of the Zionist Organization of America; Jan Masaryk, Foreign Minister of the Czecho-Slovakian government-in-exile; Sir Ronald Campbell, British Minister to Washington, and Henry Monsky, president of B'nai B'rith, Jewish fraternal organization.

Dr. Weizmann, who is sixty-seven years old, reviewed the age-old quest of the Jews for a homeland in Palestine, told of the advantages that have come to both Arabs and Jews from the resettlement of Jews in Palestine through the efforts of the Zionist movement and expressed confidence that at the end of this war Palestine will take on a new importance

Wedgwood, In British House Of Lords, Defends Demand That Palestine Jews Be Allowed To Arm

The arming of Jews in Palestine was debated in the House of Lords at a stormy session, in which Lord Wedgwood defended his opinion that they should be permitted to mobilize.

He charged that he had long been pilloried by the Foreign Office for so believing. Viscount Cranborne, Colonial Secretary and government leader in the House of Lords, dismissed these ideas as "dangerous nonsense."

It was not the first time in recent months that the once staid peers provided parliamentary fire-works and this battle lost nothing through its concern over one of the touchiest subjects in British public life.

The argument settled down to a wrangle between Lord Wedgwood and members of the government, with both sides making generous references to the United States. The speakers freely suggested that the reason why Jews are not armed is fear of trouble with Arabs throughout the Middle East.

Lord Wedgwood started the debate by rising to answer an accusation by Lord Cranborne that his recent broadcast to a Zionist dinner in New York was designed to incite the Jews of Palestine to violence against the British authorities. Incitements to violence were not of themselves altogether bad, he continued, but it was not true to say he attempted such a thing because "it is years since any word of mine has ever been reported in Palestine."

The response to his broadcast included twenty-nine letters, all but three of which approved him, Lord Wedgwood said, and the three dissidents were [illegible] the Fascists of [illegible] broadcast, saying in connection that it was his honest opinion that the Jews of Palestine will not be allowed to carry arms, form home guards or kill Nazis. The real reason why the storm broke around his head, Lord Wedgwood asserted was that when he spoke frankly to the United States "I told America the ugly truth because I wished to force the hands of the Foreign Office."

"When I speak to America," he went on, "I do not do so with my tongue in my cheek and I desire the foreign office and the B.B.C. to keep their tongues in the proper place."

Lord Wedgwood said he wondered whether he had grounds for damages for libel after the B.B.C. and the foreign office punished the censor for permitting the broadcast, and for issuing a statement to the press without consulting him.

Lord Cranborne, replying, declared Lord Wedgwood was downright wicked in airing views that in effect "tell the American people that I and my officials are Fascists, backing up the policy of the enemy." If it were "merely nonsense of which Lord Wedgwood is guilty it would not very much matter," Lord Cranborne went on, "but in the present situation it is mischievous, even dangerous nonsense."

Lord Cranborne disputed Lord Wedgwood's contention that the Foreign Office was not carrying out the wishes of Parliament.

"What we are not doing is to carry out a policy approved by Lord Wedgwood," he said.

Civil war between the Jews and Arabs in Palestine can hardly be regarded as leading to a solution of the problem in that quarter, Lord Cranborne declared.

"Palestine is much more like a hair shirt than Elija's mantle and

This group, which is composed of only twenty-five members, was founded in 1920 when its members were only in their teens, and raised funds for local charities, supplied Passover baskets, and at one time supplied families with milk and coal. Members are knitting socks, sweaters and helmets with wool which they buy. Recently $25 was contributed to the Red Cross Medical Aid to Russia and to the Red Cross British Bomb Victims fund. None of the club's funds are spent for social affairs and through teas and such activities it raised funds to furnish a room at Stanley barracks and another room at Camp 20, Mimico. A few weeks ago it held a jam shower at which eighty pounds of jam were received for the women's committee of the Toronto Military hospital. Members meet twice a month at each other's homes. Mrs. Leon Weinstein is president.

Alien Students Barred By College

The University of Missouri has closed its doors to citizens of countries at war with the United States, Dr. Frederick A. Middlebush, president of the university, said.

Dr. Middlebush stated that the university's curators had adopted a resolution "that it be the policy of the board of curators that citizens of the countries at war with the United States not be admitted as students." It is understood, however, that exceptions may be made in individual cases upon appeal to the board.

The action would affect half a dozen or more students, citizens of Italy, Japan, Hungary and Germany, who were students during the term just closed, if they sought to re-enroll. At least two have received their first citizenship papers.

ORT Activity In Canada Envisions Three Schools For Technical And Agricultural Training

By Vladimir Grossman, Of Montreal

It is true the Jews display a great deal of ability whenever they find it necessary to adjust themselves to new conditions in new lands. Jewish immigrants become, ten years after arrival, in Mexico good Mexicans, in Argentina good Argentinians, in Belgium good Belgians, in the South African Union good Afrikanders. They have this capacity owing to their long history of migration and to their strong urge to live and live fully.

We refuse to cease existing; we do not wish to be dissolved and to be an unrecognisable part of other peoples. Nor do we want to be a retrogressive element in any country which we happen to inhabit. We mean to be good citizens and to contribute as Jews to the land in which we live.

In the internment camp of Le Aux Noix, where Ort recently opened a workshop in which [illegible] internees, in order that they may become productive men, will be trained as mechanics, I attended last winter a theatrical performance which I am sure I will never forget. The internees, both German and Austrian Jews, presented in English John Drinkwater's play "Oliver Cromwell."

A stage, with the proper scenery, was erected; costumes in the style of the Cromwellian period were made; and the actors, all men, who also took the feminine parts, knew the text of the play well. Each scene had a musical score. The role of Oliver Cromwell was played by a young Viennese Jew. After the performance all the players appeared on the stage. The actors and "the public," in the presence of the commandant and officers, sang enthusiastically," "God Save the King."

Truly speaking, I had seen that evening two plays,—Oliver Cromwell, and, German Jews in Canada. The first performance was artificial, the second, life itself, a page from the history of Jews; the first was theatre, the second reality. It was pathetic to watch these men, these foreign Jews, making a most effective attempt to identify themselves with the new land, to see them making an offering to the new land of all their capacities, all their forces, all their hopes. Is there any better warranty that such humans will become first-class citizens?

The idea that the post-war period will bring with it a newly reconstructed world and a new orientation, is by now a truism. Things were not good in pre-war society; they were topsy-turvy. Abnormality ruled the world's economy and social institutions. All that will have to be changed — a period of reconstruction will set in.

When, though, the process of reconstruction shall begin, no one can tell. We are too absorbed in the present war to think of the peace which is to come. It is obvious, however, that this process cannot start at a definite date of the calendar, say, the first or the fifteenth of this or that month. It is no less obvious, nevertheless, that if our social structure has been badly planned and built, a change must be made NOW — and not at some time in the future; that if our ways of living were wrong up to now, these must be altered, immediately, because of the war and the expected victory. We cannot "in the meantime" accept the old and abnormal forms of life, for that would mean building a healthy future upon a diseased present.

It is this consideration which has motivated Ort — an organization dedicated to a new Jewish education, an organization concerned with the rehabilitation, through work, industry and agriculture, of the Jewish people — to extend its activities among and for the benefit of refugees.

Ort has been forced by the catastrophic conditions of a large section of the Jewish people to abandon its normal course of industrial and agricultural education and to devote itself almost entirely to the urgent task of rescuing the many thousands of Jews who are at present utterly ruined. No adequate medical relief can be given a wounded soldier while he is on the battlefield and no real assistance can be afforded to one lying prostrate under the ruins of a house which has been destroyed. But everything that is human and possible must be done, whatever the condition and the circumstances of the helpless.

Ort, therefore, found it necessary to give up, temporarily, the work it had done for many tens of years in order to bring help to Jews who are kept in internment camps, and, sometimes, to such who are confined in concentration camps. Several years ago Ort opened a number of workshops in Switzerland for the benefit of many refugees who, hounded out of their native land, were stranded in that small country and could go no farther.

The large technical institute which Ort had built some twenty years ago in Paris had, in a certain sense, also become a schooling centre for refugees. Those refugees were at that time referred to as Jewish migrants from Eastern Europe. Of the same order, too, are the few temporary training farms which Ort found it necessary to establish.

Nor did Ort ever do mere charitable work. Its view has always been that even temporary assistance must be educational in character. There was — and there is — no intention on the part of Ort to minimize the worth of philanthropic institutions. Ort, though, has in its six decades of existence adhered to the principle of preparing men for physical work and self-rehabilitation, no matter what the circumstances in which they happen to be.

And there are, no doubt, thousands of Jews in the different parts of the world who mention the name of "Ort" with a blessing on their lips at the thought of the constructive help this organization has given them. They surely remember that not only were they assisted in time of need but that they were taught trades and crafts which enabled them to blaze a new trail in their existence.

Notwithstanding its novel departure the basic character of Ort should not be forgotten, particularly at a time when local educational problems are discussed and general reconstructional plans are made. Ort is first and foremost an educational organization. When we speak of the younger Jewish generation in Canada; when we speak of the economic structure of Canada's Jews; when we speak of new vocations for our people; when we speak of adjustment and readjustment after the present war — we always have in mind a series of definite plans of Ort activity in Canada.

The new Canadian Ort organization which is now being built moreover will be concerned with all the three important Jewish centres in the Dominion — Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. If there be a need of schools for the technical and agricultural training of Jewish youth in Canada, such schools must be built in all the three centres of the land.

To be sure, the realization of these plans must not be deferred. Necessity brooks no delay. What is to be done to-morrow must be started today. Upon the realization of these plans depends the answer to the question — when shall we start this work of reconstruction?

German Jewish Refugees Are At Work On Farms In Canada

It was many months ago that the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies made representations to Canadian Government authorities for the release of a large group of German and Austrian Jewish internees on the grounds that these internees could be engaged in agricultural work. The Immigration Department after consideration agreed to release certain groups of internees and these were very happy when they were finally led out of the gates of the internment camps where they were confined for such a long time merely because they had the misfortune to be born in countries which are to-day under the barbaric rule of the Nazis.

These German and Austrian Jewish refugees, themselves the first victims of Nazism, were interned in a country which is fighting against an enemy who is also their enemy. That is why they were so happy when they found themselves free once and were sent to work on farms of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba. Indeed they are happy to be working for Canada and are ready to engage in any task no matter how difficult, which is of service to the country.

Farming is their occupation. They are experienced farm workers, having done this sort of work before; they are strong, hard-working people, the kind of people Canada needs badly. There is a definite shortage in Canada to-day of agricultural workers, that is, a shortage of labour in food production, which in war time is as essential as any other war industry. One group of these internees was released from the camp at Ile aux Noix and another from the Sherbrooke Camp. In order to obtain the consent of the Government in releasing the internees, it was necessary at first to find suitable places for their employment. The U.J.R. & W.R.A. communicated with Jewish and non Jewish farmers throughout the country.

It is interesting to note that among the farmers who have undertaken to employ the released Jewish internees there are such who themselves were victims of the Nazi regime, formerly farmers in Germany, Austria and Czechoslovakia, who were forced to leave their farms as a result of the Nazi persecutions and seek refuge in Canada. They came to Canada during the two years preceding the war as well as since the beginning of the war, and have settled on land with the aid of the U.J.R. & W.R.A. They were assisted by means of loans granted to them for the purchase of necessary farm implements and equipment.

Naturally, many difficulties had to be overcome before they could manage to become self-supporting. It was not easy in the beginning for them to adapt themselves to totally new surroundings. The first year was especially difficult, particularly for those who had limited financial means. But the greatest hardships have already been overcome. Saul Hayes, Executive Director of the U.J.R. & W.R.A., states that in general the refugee families have been successful on their farms; that they have begun to reap results of their hard work and fine farming ability.

They are in several cases, repaying their loans to the refugee committee and are enlarging the scope of their production. These farmers are now in need of help in the operation of their farms, and when the refugee committee approached them concerning the interned farmer refugees, they were the first to submit applications requesting that they be allowed to hire the released refugees. Many of the released have been sent to these farms, many of them having to travel as far as Winnipeg. The U.J.R. & W.R.A. helped to provide travelling and other necessary expenses for those who were of such assistance.

There are still a number of internees remaining in the camps, waiting anxiously for the day of their release. He pointed out that all refugees who have been released to date, as students, Yeshiva scholars or technicians, have established themselves satisfactorily, and he had no doubt that the present group of farm workers would also get along well. They will work on farms in accordance with the prevailing farm labor standards in the country.

Guns—
TO BLAST THE AXIS

Mass production of heavy guns, already an accomplished fact, is one of Canada's most amazing war achievements.

In a scant two years new factories have been built, machine tools manufactured and installed, green hands trained—a whole industry created.

To-day Canada is producing in quantity ten different types of heavy guns, complete with all mountings and equipment, ready to fire. One Canadian factory, manufacturing artillery from scrap to complete gun, equals in size any similar plant in the world. One of the largest automatic gun plants in existence is located in Canada.

Production schedules for 1942 call for more than 400 anti-aircraft guns a month; 500 field guns a month; 150 naval guns a month, and over 1,000 extra barrels a month.

This advertisement is published as a contribution to the general knowledge of our country's war effort and as an inspiration through the dependents. For reasons of security complete figures are not available. The facts presented, however, are impressive evidence of the growing might of Canada's war machine.

Swastika Over South Africa

Nazi Penetration Holds Lessons For America

By Johanna Thal-Birwa, In The New Republic

There is an urgent warning to America in the treason trial of forty-eight defendants now taking place in Johannesburg. Here, in a dominion which is at war with the Axis, the opening of the trial was marked by fresh outbreaks of sabotage and lawlessness, after—the wire services added—"nearly four months of quiet." One of the first witnesses, himself a former policeman, testified that a complete battalion of a Nazi storm-trooper organization, formed to overthrow the government was composed of members of the South African police force. Nazi infiltration of the police department had advanced so far before the government bestirred itself to move against their organization, known as Ossewa Brandwag, that 400 Johannesburg policemen had to be arrested when an effort was made to break the ring.

Although many were later released, the arrest of this number of suspects from the police force of a city of 400,000 population is evidence of the terrible potentialities of the Nazi infiltration technique when it operates against weak or behind opposition in a territory like South Africa. And it stands as one more lesson to North and South America, if France, Norway and the other betrayed nations were insufficient, of the nature of the enemy we are facing. The isolationists who feel even now that Hitler would have halted his aggression at the borders of our hemisphere should study the ruthless and brilliant methods that his Nazis employed to infiltrate South Africa. And more than this, the extent to which these methods have succeeded.

Fundamentally, the technique was based on simple threat: "Pretty soon Hitler will be boss even in South Africa. Refuse to work with us and we shall remember it." I saw the Nazis use it with amazing results.

They have been hard at work with their fifth-column organization and propaganda since 1935, and today it is bearing its terrible fruit. The clashes between soldiers and civilians which occur regularly are not mere brawls between soldiers on leave and solid Dutch citizens, such as might occur anywhere. They are the result of organized interference with the British Commonwealth's war effort. The (Dutch) Boers and the South African Germans have united in doing everything they can to obstruct the war effort, even to disrupting the training and embarkation of soldiers.

South Africa, rich in mineral and agricultural resources, with its important strategic bases for the battle of the Atlantic, and its large German minority, was the object of Nazi interest long before the present war began. As usual, Hitler planned the attack thoroughly and from as many angles as possible. One of the first steps he took was to dispatch his notorious "tourist" battalions into the dominion while the door of immigration was still open.

The way in which this was done is a fine example of diabolical Nazi cleverness. Refugees who were able to buy first-class tickets on German steamers were allowed to leave Germany for South Africa. But each had to be accompanied by a Nazi "tourist," for whom the refugee was forced to buy another first-class ticket. Thus the innocent refugee had no other choice than to carry his mortal enemy with him.

By this method, literally thousands of organized and trained Nazis, posing as victims of Hitler, found their way to South Africa. Once there, they formed a complete ring from Southwest Africa to Tanganyika, through Portuguese East Africa and the Union of South Africa itself. They set up headquarters at Johannesburg, and in a short time their organizations comprised 40,000 German and Dutch members.

Simultaneously, a corps of propaganda agents arrived to do their subversive work, headed by the Dr. Manfred Zapp who was recently deported from the United States for the same business. Taking advantage of the democratic traditions of South Africa—as they always do—in order to widen their influence, the Nazis made no attempt to keep their activities secret. As a matter of fact, they advertised them. While I was in Johannesburg during the pre-war years there appeared in one of the leading newspapers a long article which described the Nazi movement in South Africa, openly and in great detail.

A few members of the government were moved to express protests against Nazi activities, some antagonistic letters appeared in the same paper, but no concrete efforts of any kind were made to put a halt to the Nazi machinations. The attitude generally taken by men in a position to do something was, "This is a free country and we can't curtail the rights even of individuals like these to say and write whatever they wish." One can observe this same attitude at work in the United States in the case of the native fascists.

It was an attitude that enabled the Nazis to become still bolder and more impudent. They displayed the swastika wherever they pleased and high-pressured many South African citizens into joining the movement. When unable to win them over with propaganda, they resorted to blackmail and beatings.

A friend of mine, a man of German origin who was known as an outspoken anti-Nazi, was enjoying a glass of beer one evening in a German restaurant. Two young Germans came in, sat down at his table and started a conversation.

"What do you think of Hitler?" one asked.

"I think Hitler should be committed to an asylum!" my friend replied.

This statement led to a heated argument, and the young men left the restaurant. When my friend left, they dragged him into their car, gangster fashion, and gave him a horrible beating. Finally, bleeding and unconscious, he was pushed out of the car.

Another method the Nazis used to swell their ranks was to watch the advertisements closely, and if a German name appeared, to call on the advertiser at once. If he was not a Nazi, they would persuade him to become a member, calling repeatedly until he was "convinced," either by persuasion, threats or boycott. If these efforts failed, force was used.

Even more spectacular was the use of the radio for recruiting. One would be tuned in on a short-wave program, then suddenly be startled by: "Hello, South Africa, this is Germany calling. Is Fritz Schulze listening? Know, Fritz, that you are of German origin. If your parents forgot to tell you, then I am telling you now. You live in Pretoria (Transvaal) on 55 Main Street. You were born in Bloemfontein on January 25, 1920, and you are a clerk in the National Bank. Surely you are a good German and would like to visit Germany. Become a member of the Jugendgruppe (Youth Group), and you will be entitled to come here at reduced fare. We'll welcome you with great pleasure and it won't cost you a penny to stay in Berlin. Come on, don't hesitate, pack your things! You will be very welcome!"

What a heady thrill to be called by name from the German radio. These invitations seemed irresistible to large numbers of South African German boys and girls, who left excitedly for Berlin and came back thoroughly trained Nazis, sworn into the service of the Reich. One girl I knew who went to Germany on the half-fare arrangement was accorded the honor of meeting Goering. He gave her a box of chocolates and treated her like a queen. She was kept for six months' training and was then sent back as a paid Nazi agent.

Berlin has never for a single moment relaxed its iron grip on this movement. As soon as the South African penetration showed signs of developing into a wave of purposeless incidents and brawls, Zapp arrived in the role of Chief Coordinator. He got to work immediately on the task of fusing German and Dutch sections of the movement into a united Nazi front, by a campaign for the return of Germany's colonies.

Among the Dutch there were many who had never forgotten the Boer War and who nursed an old bitterness against England. They fell an easy prey to Zapp's distorted anti-British propaganda. Die Woche wrote of plans for "a white Reich on the Black Continent." Zapp made use of the anti-British Dutch organization, the Nationalist Party, headed by Dr. D. F. Malan, a member of Parliament. Together they issued Die Transvaaler and Ossewa Brandwag and fed them with vicious anti-Semitic and anti-British propaganda. A joint Storm Troop organization was formed under Eric Louw, also a Nationalist member of Parliament.

In demanding the return of the former German colonies, Zapp particularly stressed Southwest Africa. In this project the Nazis were so successful that for a time the Union of South Africa, as the mandator of these territories, seriously considered turning them back to Germany. But finally anti-Nazi members of Parliament woke to the realization that Hitler wanted Southwest Africa only as a stepping-stone from which to attack the Union of South Africa, and the movement lost favor with the South Africans.

This intensive Nazi propaganda affected the country. Factories stopped work, unemployment grew and the people lived in fear of open revolts by the Nazi shock troops. The war broke out. Prime Minister Hertzog advocated neutrality toward both Germany and Great Britain. General Smuts, as Deputy Prime Minister, carried enough weight to defeat this revolution in the Parliament. War was declared against Germany and General Hertzog resigned immediately.

General Smuts's success was very remarkable indeed, in view of the fact that of the 150 members of the assembly three-fourths were known to be Hertzog supporters. The German Nazis who escaped internment, together with the Dutch Nazis, are still very active in underground movements and are responsible for the recent clashes between soldiers and so-called civilians (in reality Nazi groups), sabotage in factories and shipyards and interference with troop-ship sailings.

The success of this penetration should hold some lessons for America. In confronting the Nazi forces within this country—both native and foreign-born—we are dealing with men who are following a clever, ruthless technique. Belaboring them with words is not enough. When their true Nazi nature is understood, they must be fought with the firm action of a strong, alert democracy.

"Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an easier."

It is easy for Jews to share the indignation and impatience of Canada's Finance Minister Ilsley over the Reverend T. C. Douglas, C.C.F. member for Weyburn, Saskatchewan, for his protest in the House against large shipments of beer going to the troops in Libya, and his plea that the Dominion Government restrict the liquor and beer business in time of war, apart from all the arguments which Reverend Douglas brought to bear on his side and apart from the pungent answer that Mr. Ilsley gave him. Reverend Douglas is a Baptist who views all alcoholic beverage with loathing and alarm in peace time and, like all prohibitionists, seizes upon time of war to get in a few good licks in support of his cause. The Jews believe that such an attitude as theirs is unwholesome, and nothing would surprise them more than to hear one of their rabbis declare himself in favor of restrictions upon the liquor business.

For them the argument which Mr. Ilsley gave is superfluous, albeit of interest, chiefly, perhaps, because there are actually people who need to be persuaded of reasons why troops in Libya, or people anywhere, should have beer if they want it. Mr. Ilsley said: "When you think of what the forces of the Empire are going through in Libya, a tropical country where it is very hard to get the right kind of water, or any water; when you think of the deaths men die who are taking part in tank warfare, I think a good many persons here in Canada who are making sarcastic remarks about the sending of beer to soldiers in Libya could be better employed."

To Mr. Ilsley's remarks the Montreal Gazette added its own snort: "Better employed? They ought to be ashamed. Of course Canadian beer is going to the soldiers in Libya, a lot of it, and the more the better. This is one of the services which Canadian industry is able to render and does render in this war . . . Unfortunately, no military commissariat would be justified in permitting British soldiers to go into the Libyan desert relying upon a miraculous provision of water. It is possible to supply them with Canadian beer, and that is being done, and Canadians ought to be thankful that their country is able to meet an urgent, even an essential need. Beer is a mild, thirst-quenching and strengthening drink. It is out of the hard liquor class. It is not an intoxicant, certainly as doled out to an army in the field . . .

"Nor should it be forgotten that the liquor and beer industry in Canada is making a heavy financial contribution to the national war effort through taxation. As shown by Mr. Ilsley, that taxation has been increased 75 per cent. on spirits and 100 per cent. on malt since the beginning of the war. The tax on wine has risen from 15 cents to 40 cents a gallon. These levies have increased the war revenue. They cannot be said to have facilitated liquor and beer consumption. They represent all that the federal Government ought to do in this direction, and all, as the Finance Minister made plain, that it is prepared to do."

What the Baptists and others want, the Jews would be opposed to, and that is prohibition, believing as they do that restriction on the personal liberty of adults in this matter is the wrong way to go about stamping out intemperance. To them prohibition itself would be the liquor evil because it would make forbidden fruit out of one of the bounties of life which, like all the others, should be enjoyed in moderation. As long as alcoholic beverages of all kinds can be bought legally and consumed in the presence of family and friends without stigma attached to the act, the Jews are not afraid of a liquor problem. But prohibition brings out the smart alec in youngsters and even Jewish ones might get to think that it is smart to drink immoderately and to flout a law which is impossible of enforcement.

Jews are famous for their sobriety and yet "temperance" is a word unknown in the family vocabulary. They believe in moderation and children grow up applying it to everything, drinking included but not stressed. However, in addition, in the Jewish attitude there is no room for indulgent amusement over sons and daughters who might so far forget themselves as to drink too much, and no "boys will be boys" leniency in this matter. A young man who drank too much would cease to be a young man in control of his faculties, he would be a pig and there would be nothing for him except stern, swift and withering disapproval. To have to hide liquor from him instead of leaving it in the buffet would be considered a confession of failure on the part of parents to have employed the usual group method of inculcating in him the proper degree of self-discipline.

So, naturally, Jews regard prohibition as a measure adopted too late in dismal confession of failure on the part of the nation to rear a moderate generation. Their group exemplifies what the social expectation of sobriety can achieve generation after generation, and as far as prohibition is concerned, those who remember it hope never to see such an abomination at work again. f.f.c.

NAZIS SCREEN MACHINE-GUNNING OF 258 JEWS

and American airmen to bomb German cities.

Goebbels's threat of retaliation against the Royal Air Force's 1,000-plane raids on Cologne, Essen and other German war centers, and his reference to possible extermination of Jews "beyond Europe," might mean big-scale German air attacks or anti-Jewish terrorism carried out by Germany's allies outside Europe—perhaps in Japan, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

The Propaganda Minister said that the "Jewish press" of London and New York had, with "bloodthirsty malice," brought on the bombing of German cities. "The Jews are playing a frivolous game, and they will pay for it with the extermination of their race in all Europe and perhaps even beyond Europe," he wrote.

JEWISH MOTHER FIRST TO APPLY IN GOLD STAR GROUP

Officials of the organization explained that she was the first bereaved mother of this war to apply for membership. They said an amendment of the rules was assured during the convention to open membership to this war's mothers; and thus regarded Mrs. Kram as already a member. So far, they said, five other mothers have applied to wear the gold star in token of their loss in this war's battles.

Mrs. Kram and her husband, Abraham Kram, who accompanied her, told reporters their son had enlisted in the Navy Dec. 19. His body was not recovered until two and a half months after his tanker went down. Another son, Harvey I. Kram, 21 years old, is studying engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mrs. Emma L. Balcolm, retiring president of the gold star group, made public a letter from President Roosevelt, which said, in part:

"On behalf of our nation, I pay to you a tribute which belongs alone to you, the mothers of those who rendered the noblest and most glorious service for their country. Through their sacrifice you have been granted an eternal place in American history and the right to the stars of gold which are your symbol."

WEDGWOOD, IN BRITISH HOUSE OF LORDS

is not always easy to wear," he said.

Lord Strabolgi came to the rescue of Lord Wedgwood, saying he was astonished at Lord Cranborne's impression that arming the Jews would mean war with the Arabs. He told the Lords that a powerful American committee, supported by Mrs. Roosevelt and Secretaries Stimson and Knox, was seeking to raise an army of 200,000 Jews to fight on the British side and that this "has become a test of our sincerity."

Lord Moyne supported Lord Cranborne, saying:

"I am always amazed by the attitude of Lord Wedgwood, who boasts of his patriotism and parades his love of England, and I cannot see how he can reconcile that with the role of abusing and libelling his own countrymen. He is a peculiar type of Englishman who was once the delight of our enemies and the despair of our friends."

WEIZMANN HONORED IN NEW YORK

as a refuge and a homeland for the dispossessed and persecuted Jews of Europe.

"We stand on the threshold of transformations, world-shaking transformations that may change the face of our civilization for centuries to come," he said. "The future rests to a great extent upon forces over which we have no control.

"All we can do is to place our faith in the triumph of democracy—a triumph for which we are ready to tax ourselves to the utmost in human and material sacrifice.

"And when the dawn of a free world, in which justice shall prevail, rises slowly over the stilled battlefield, we must be ready once more to give our all so that the Jewish problem may find its final solution through Palestine."

"I, for one," Dr. Weizmann concluded, "feel certain that the democratic victory is so indissolubly bound up with adherence to a higher morality in the relationships between nations and peoples, that the Jewish homeland in Palestine will inevitably result from that victory. For a Jewish homeland [illegible] will also grow to the hundred Jewish people in their quest for a home—a home in the better world of tomorrow."
